Friday 29th September, 2006

Gordon Theatre, The University of Reading

The Centre for Biomimetics at the University of Reading invites you to join us on Friday 29th September, 2006 for our one-day conference. This year we are inviting presentations from both industry and academia that highlight current technologies that have used inspiration from nature as a route to improving sustainability. We welcome you to present a talk, poster or just attend and enjoy what is sure to be an exciting and fascinating day.

The fee of £60 will include refreshments during the course of the day and a three-course lunch with wine. Delegates will receive a book of abstracts. In addition to talks, there will be a poster session, demonstrations and ample opportunities for networking.

Who should attend: academics, designers, industrialists and policymakers who have an interest in new technologies inspired by natural systems and those with an interest in sustainable technologies.

Practical information: The University of Reading is easily reached by car or public transport and Reading is well connected to the national rail network. For those travelling from further afield, London Heathrow airport is 50 km to the east and served by frequent coach services.

To register: Please complete the attached form, together with registration fee. Those wishing to present a talk or poster should provide a brief abstract of their presentation, not to exceed 500 words, as soon as possible by email.
