Wild Service Tree
Sorbus torminalis

The Wild Service Tree is one of our most ornamental native trees but one of our least well known.

A good garden tree with an upright form covered in white flowers against the young maple like foliage with good autumn colour Apple scab in some years is the down side. The fruits were used to brew the drink ‘checkers’. The species can make a suckering group as in this specimen.