Programme information and content

The programme aims to provide you with a degree-level education in marketing and business economics together with training in the application of these disciplines to some of the key challenges facing the UK, European and global food industry.

The degree draws on the University's internationally recognised expertise in the food chain and its excellent links with industry. Based in the Department of Food Economics and Marketing it benefits from close links with the Chartered Institute of Marketing's Sector Interest Group for the food industry and a thriving marketing community with social and professional events organised by a student-led Marketing Society.

As a graduate of Food Marketing and Business Economics, you will be particularly well-placed to move into a range of business and related roles within the food industry. Previous students have gone on to work for a wide range of companies, both big and small, including Mars, Sainsbury's, Kellogg's, Unilever, and Waitrose.

The development of applied research skills features strongly in this degree including a marketing research project for a real food company and a final year dissertation on a food-related topic tailored to your interests.

You have the option of studying this degree over four years with a placement year as the third year. Our placement students have worked in sales and marketing, buying, product development, advertising, brand development, business administration, social media and communications strategy. You will be given training and advice by our careers and placements team to find a suitable placement, to enhance the quality of your placement applications and offered on-going support during your placement year.

During the course of their studies at Reading, all students will be expected to enhance their academic and personal transferable skills. In following this programme, students will have had the opportunity to develop such skills, in particular relating to analytical and critical thinking, problem solving, numeracy, research design, information handling, report writing, communication (both written and oral), team working, use of information technology and career management and will have been encouraged to further develop and enhance the full set of skills through a variety of opportunities available outside their curriculum.

Part 1:	Part 1 introduces the underlying concepts and principles relating to marketing, management and economics together with an overview of the food industry in the UK and the value chain from ‘farm to fork’. Students will also start to develop quantitative and qualitative research skills relevant to applied economists, marketers and business managers. In Part 1 the range of options on offer is designed to give students the flexibility to select subjects outside their main degree area if they wish.
Part 2:	Part 2 build on the foundations from Part 1 and further develops knowledge and critical understanding of food economics, consumer behaviour and marketing. Decision making tools for business, marketing and financial management are also addressed in this part of the degree, as are research methods and data analysis techniques. Project management skills, teamwork and the ability to apply research skills are reinforced by a food business project linked to a real food business. Students are exposed to professional practice through this research and other interactions with the food industry embedded in the degree. Options in Part 2 provide opportunities for students to delve in greater depth into areas closely aligned to their degree such as, digital marketing, entrepreneurship, food product development and food retailing.
Part 3:	Part 3 modules focus on and debate some of the key strategic questions faced by managers, marketers and policy makers working within the food industry both nationally and internationally. You will become familiar with the frameworks for analysing these questions and the main contemporary perspectives on how they may be resolved. While a key dimension of the degree and business success is identifying market opportunities, businesses also needs to be competitive in delivering the product to consumers, hence Part 3 also includes the principles of supply chain management and the regulatory framework surrounding food business. In Part 3 you will also have the opportunity to showcase the skills in research and enquiry you have developed in the degree through an independent research project on a topic of your choice. Options in Part 3 offer opportunities to further specialise, for example in consumer attitudes, advertising and branding, and human resource management.
